

Case Study:

Sexual Harassment

Business Issue

A law firm had been given the electronic discovery provided by opposing counsel regarding a sexual harassment claim. The law firm was working with their client that was claiming that she had been harassed through verbal and written means and the written was through email using the company's email system. This firm had reached an impasse with the company as to negotiating a settlement that could be fair to their client.

Solution

After initial consultation with this law firm, it was determined that the documentation that was received was not complete enough to properly determine its validity. The firm needed assistance in constructing the request for discovery to insure that they would have access to all of the important information regarding this case.

Results

The request for discovery was served to opposing counsel and the company in question and the negotiations were resumed within a week and a resolution to the case was reached with a settlement agreement that was determined to be fair to the firms client.
